

As we reflect on Henry Van Til's statement that "Culture is religion externalized," we must ask ourselves—who do those who call themselves Christian homeschoolers really worship when they pursue the world's model for educating children by separating them from their parents through learning centers, choirs, bands, youth groups... when God commands His people to disciple their own children?